This study examined the relationship between internalized homophobia and psychological distress. The sample consisted of 217 gay and lesbian individuals who completed self-report questionnaires. The aim of the study was to investigate whether internalized homophobia was predictive of psychological distress, either in the direction of positive relationships with internalized homophobia being associated with psychological distress or with negative relationships with internalized homophobia being associated with psychological distress. Results showed that internalized homophobia was positively associated with psychological distress. An explanatory factor of internalized homophobia was also found. The findings suggest that internalized homophobia influences the level of psychological distress of gay and lesbian individuals.With elite training facilities, local baseball and softball leagues, and a professional schedule, Lubbock is the perfect place to play baseball.
