Rabbit Rabbit got up from his bed and looked out of his room. There was no monster or ghost outside. Only the mountain range at the back of his room was in sight. But it was the same as a week ago. Rabbit Rabbit got up and left his room. "This land looks fine!" he thought. "I must go to that mountain." He walked towards that mountain. "Wot is this mystery? How long has it been that I have not been able to go to that place? Why don't I see there is some kind of monster?" He was shouting at that time. "Who is shouting here?" asked a strange voice. "Who said that?" "I am a frog! We sometimes get scared by ourselves. A frog does not get scared by other people," answered the frog. Rabbit Rabbit was confused. "But you told me that you are a frog?" asked Rabbit Rabbit. "I am not a frog. I am a toad," answered the toad. "Toad? What do you want?" asked Rabbit Rabbit. "I am looking for an underground house," said the toad. "What does that mean?" asked Rabbit Rabbit. "It means that there is a house which no one has seen for a long time. I am looking for that house." "If you are looking for that house, you must be an abnormal toad," said Rabbit Rabbit. "I am not abnormal," said the toad. "Yes, you are abnormal, because you say so," answered Rabbit Rabbit. "Then I am abnormal? Is that so?" "I am normal," answered the toad. "I am not normal," said Rabbit Rabbit. "Yes, you are normal. You are a normal rabbit." "Thank you," said Rabbit Rabbit. "What is it?" asked the toad. "I am thinking of going to that mountain. I feel that the mystery may have been cleared." "Thank you," said Rabbit Rabbit. "Thank you for your kindness." "

Description

500 years ago, in one of those rare bands of civilization that survived the famine of disease and disaster from the devastating madness of the Age of Steel two hundred years before, a group of researchers working at the University of Carabas discovered what looked like an ironclad traveling through the sky toward the city, city after lonely city. Upon discovering what they had discovered, they sent out a warning to all of the established cities of the world, but with no success at all of getting any real evidence of their existence, they began planning an attack on said mysterious foes. They managed to get their hands on some samples of the object that was already on its way, and with the aid of a all the Mechanical Engineers of the Galaxy, created a suit of armor that was not only so large it couldn't be moved, but so powerful that it rose from one foot to heights of two-hundred feet. With the new Ironclad suit tested and working, they set out to finish the job of destroying anything in their path as quickly as possible. Using the strongest guns and explosives they had access to, they destroyed most of the cities that came in their path. However, for the first time in history, something happened. The Ironclad moved, it moved fast and it moved without warning. And when it arrived at their cities, they were set free to destroy everything living. Somewhere along the way, the leader of the defense resigned his position as World Leader, and went off to raise a brand new team of dedicated warriors to follow him. Now they have gotten together, and have set out to destroy those remaining 6 or 7 cities before whatever is chasing them gets

What's new in The Iron Oath:

The Iron Oath is a historical and heroic fantasy novel by Walter John Williams, first published in 1984 by Ace Books. The book is the first of a highly popular trilogy that begins with the novel's sequel The High Queen, and is set in a fictional continent in the fictional Age of the Sixth World fantasy setting, during the reign of the Dark Lord Dominas Drakath. It was first released in the United States on June 14, 1984, and remains one of the bestselling Iron Age novels. The Iron Oath has inspired numerous sequels, comic books, role-playing games, and short stories, and most major eras within the fantasy genre have at least one focus on the character of Talon Kalkur or the events surrounding his birth and family tree, among other characters. Plot The Iron Oath is set one hundred and fifteen years before the events of The High Queen. The Iron Age, in which the story is set, was when the world was influenced by ancient and powerful evil powers. In the Age of the Sixth World, which the characters travel to, the world is influenced by the Chaotic Gods. The Third Order, a group of magicians, have taken an oath to protect and practice magick to fight the Chaotic Gods. The Age of the Fourth World, which the characters leave, was a period of tolerable chaos and tragedy. Talon Kalkur is born to House Kalkur of the Second House. He is soon left with Tazzek, the High Captor, and raised to be a warrior by the Third Order. He is a friend of Elric, a young apprentice magician, although the two often fight. House Kalkur has always been at odds with the Third Order. Talon's father, Lord Mandolf Kalkur, challenges Tazzek's leadership by using magick to kill two members of the Third Order and attempt to assassinate Lord Tazzek. When the Third Order fails to save Lord Tazzek but his apprentice magician, Moria Kulukthan, is mortally wounded, they suspect Lord Kalkur of magick. Lord Mandolf is sentenced to die in the Hanging Gardens, which was considered a symbolic death. Moria dies soon after, and Talon becomes the fifth Lord of the House Kalkur in its history. He later marries Moria's sister, Sinja, and has two children. His son, Ainvar, is born in the heat of summer, in which winter usually comes
