Tuberculosis is an ancient and ancient problem; it probably has been around as far back as the first cell and the first human. Despite the rise in acquired immunodeficiency syndrome (AIDS) and other causes of morbidity and mortality, tuberculosis remains a major problem in the developing world. It causes more deaths than any other single infectious disease in these countries, causing 2.3 million deaths per year. The majority of deaths are in children, and children under the age of 5 years are the most severely affected group. World wide, more than 250,000 children die each year from tuberculosis. Recognition of this terrible problem is occurring in the developing world. Increasing attention is being paid to prevention of the disease and treatment. Increased education and support, including family, must be emphasized. This should be supported by the international community. Hospitals and health care systems are making special efforts to treat children with tuberculosis. Improved techniques have greatly improved the ability to detect and treat this disease in children. The current resurgence of tuberculosis is not due to AIDS, the drugs used are effective in treating immunosuppressed patients. Despite the various efforts to reduce the burden of tuberculosis, new cases of tuberculosis appear to be occurring in areas where the disease was previously eradicated.
